Just checked it out in Captivate 7 because I remember there were issues with that work flow in CP6 that could be solved as Rick describes. But it seemed to work in Captivate 7: I made a recording with Captivate, it shows up in the Library as a WAV file, and I was able to attach it to one of the accordion buttons.

In spite of James's answer, I have found a few ways that it can almost be done:. By modifying the executable I can remove the trustInfo entry from the manifest (or the manifest entirely, so I can use an external one), allowing the program to start without UAC. Unfortunately this modifies the executable, so it exits shortly after due to an internal checksum test.
